Career Instructor in Human Physiology, University of Oregon

The Department of Human Physiology at the University of Oregon is seeking an innovative instructor to join a growing nationally-recognized program that provides flexible curriculum and an engaging learning environment for ~1200 undergraduate majors who aspire to be professionals in health science fields such as medicine, physical therapy, occupational therapy, nursing, dentistry, pharmacy, education, and research. This is a Non-Tenure Track Career Instructor position.

Candidates must have demonstrated excellence in teaching and learning strategies at the university level and preference will be given to individuals who hold a PhD degree in human physiology or a related field. Special consideration will be given to candidates with strong backgrounds in systems physiology including nerve, muscle, cardiovascular, respiratory, metabolic and/or exercise physiology. Specific teaching needs include undergraduate classes in Human Physiology, Research Methods, and related General Science credit courses (<http://physiology.uoregon.edu/courses>).

The successful candidate will be expected to engage in departmental and university service, work effectively with faculty, staff, and students with diverse backgrounds, participate in student advising, and to be a leader in evidence-based pedagogy for the Department of Human Physiology.

Located 110 miles south of Portland, the University of Oregon has an enrollment of 24,000. The Eugene metro area population (250,000) is in a region noted for its high quality of life and progressive cultural environment. We are approximately a one-hour drive from the Pacific Coast and the Cascade Mountains. The University is an AAU research institution and a member of the Pac-12 Conference.
