President-Elect

Councillors

Norman C. Staub

“... major new science issues face our Society in the 1990s including: science education from grammar school to university; recruitment of new physiologists (especially women and minorities); improved national, state and private funding of investigator-originated research; and international cooperation in research, training and education . . . physiologists could have important effects on science curriculum, teacher training and textbooks. . . .”
